Fighting fish are wild little fish that live in the warm, sluggish water of pools and rivers in Asia. They are only about two and a half inches long. They are savage fighters, and whenever two fighting fish get together they will use their small, sharp teeth to tear and bite each other. Fighting fish are so eager for a battle that if one fish sees its reflection in the mirror it will probably try to fight itself. For hundreds of years, the people of Thailand have been raising fighting fish, and many of them enjoy going to fish fights, which are a favorite sport there. These fights sometimes last for three hours or even longer. The fighting fish is a dull brown color, but when the male gets excited and starts to fight, it begins to glow with beautiful red and blue and gold colors. Some fighting fish are so beautiful that people raise them just because of their splendid coloring. Fighting fish eat small insects and mosquito eggs. Some Thai people raise mosquitoes, so they can feed the eggs to the fighting fish.
